Office Hours: Tuesdays, 9am-12pm, and by appointment

This course will offer undergraduate students an introduction to the practice, theory, and interpretation of oral history as a primary source in studying the history of gender and sexuality in the 20th-century U.S. In the process, we will examine issues of meaning, memory, documentary, narrative, identity, and community in conversation with the experiences of LGBTQ individuals and groups from the early 20th century to the present.

Course Goals:

During the quarter we will explore transformations in same-sex desire, practice, and identities. Using a wide range of sources, including primary historical documents, secondary historical works, documentary film and performance, and (most importantly) oral history, we will investigate how and why people with same-sex desire and non-normative gender identities navigated issues of identity, formed communities, encountered homophobia and transphobia, struggled with racism and sexism, and organized movements for social and political change.

Course assignments will offer students the opportunity to gain experience in oral history interviewing techniques, primary source research in archives and special collections, and historical writing. In the process, student research will contribute to the building of a new oral history archive documenting the LGBTQ experience at the U of C, to be collected by the Center for the Study of Gender and Sexuality (CSGS).

At the end of this course, students should be able to:
- identify and analyze how and why the social organization and cultural meaning of sexual practices and desires has changed over the course of the twentieth century, as well as the ways that race, class, gender have shaped these changes;
- understand and question scholarly texts and arguments about the role of sexuality in American life, including the types of evidence and theories scholars use to develop these arguments;
- critically assess the relationships between individual and community memories and the production of history;
- use these analytical skills to formulate their own arguments about the role of sexuality at our research site, the University of Chicago, by interpreting primary documents and oral history interviews.

Expectations and Policies:

Preparation and Participation

Since this seminar is organized as a collaborative research venture, attendance, preparation, and weekly participation is a must. Each member of the class is expected to play an active role in class discussions. Any student with more than 2 unexcused absences will have their grade lowered significantly.

You are expected to complete all assigned readings before the class for which they have been assigned. Please respect all deadlines. Late written work will be subject to grade deductions at the discretion of the instructor.

Assignments

You are expected to complete all assignments by the stated deadlines. Course assignments include the following:

1. Blog entries (1-2 paragraphs, due Wednesdays by noon on weeks 2, 3, 8)
   In order to collect your thoughts for course discussion, on certain Wednesdays I will ask you to contribute short posts to the course blog on Chalk. These informal reactions to assigned materials will constitute part of your participation grade; if you find it difficult to voice your contribute in class, I will also consider your blog posts and comments on classmates’ blogs.
2. Oral History Practice Paper (2-3pg, due Monday, April 16)
   We will practice doing oral history in class. You will pair up with a member of class and interview one another with the goal of determining how your classmate got to the University of Chicago and to our course. You will need to take careful notes and then write a 1-2 page paper that analyzes the turning point of the interview. Please bring two copies of your paper to class. You will have the chance to read and comment on your partner’s oral history.

3. ACT UP Oral History Project midterm (4-5pgs, due Monday, May 7)
   For this paper, you will select 2 oral histories from the ACT UP Oral History Project and analyze them in light of the course readings.

4. University Oral History Project final (7-9pgs, see deadlines below)
   In the early weeks of the quarter, you will select and refine a manageable research topic in consultation with the instructor. On the basis of your interests, you will be guided to a potential oral history narrator. By the end of the quarter, each student will have completed a research paper that analyzes both the content and the method of their oral history research in conversation with course readings. In addition, students will transcribe at least half an hour of their interview recording. We will discuss the stages of this project in-depth in class.

   - Wednesday, May 2 – Paper proposal due (1-2 paragraphs, post on blog)
   - Wednesday, May 30 – Interview transcripts due (length varies)
   - Friday, June 8 – Final paper due (7-9pgs)

   Please note the final paper deadline for graduating seniors is Wednesday, May 30.

Required books are also available on 2-hour reserve at Regenstein Library. All other readings are posted on Chalk.
